The Haunting

A scenario for Call of Cthulhu, for 2-5 investigators

Introduction

The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains. The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains. The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains.

Keeper Background

The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains. The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains. The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains. The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains.

Part One: The Commission

The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains. The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains.

> Read aloud: The landlord leans close. "The last tenant went mad, you know. Talked to the walls. I want that house rented by Halloween, and I will pay you well to tell me there is nothing wrong with it."

The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains. The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains.

The Newspaper Archive

In the Journal offices the investigators can find Handout 1: Providence Journal, 1880. The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains. The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains.

Part Two: The Corbitt House

The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains.

> As you push open the front door, a breath of cold air rolls out of the dark hallway. Somewhere below you, wood creaks as if under a great weight.

The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains. The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains. The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains.

The Cellar

The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains. The investigators arrive in Providence on a grey October morning. Rain beads on the windows of the boarding house and the landlord, Mr Macario, is keen to be rid of the tenant's belongings. Walter Corbitt was buried in the cellar over a century ago, and something of him remains. Hidden behind the wall is Handout 2: Walter Corbitt's Diary.

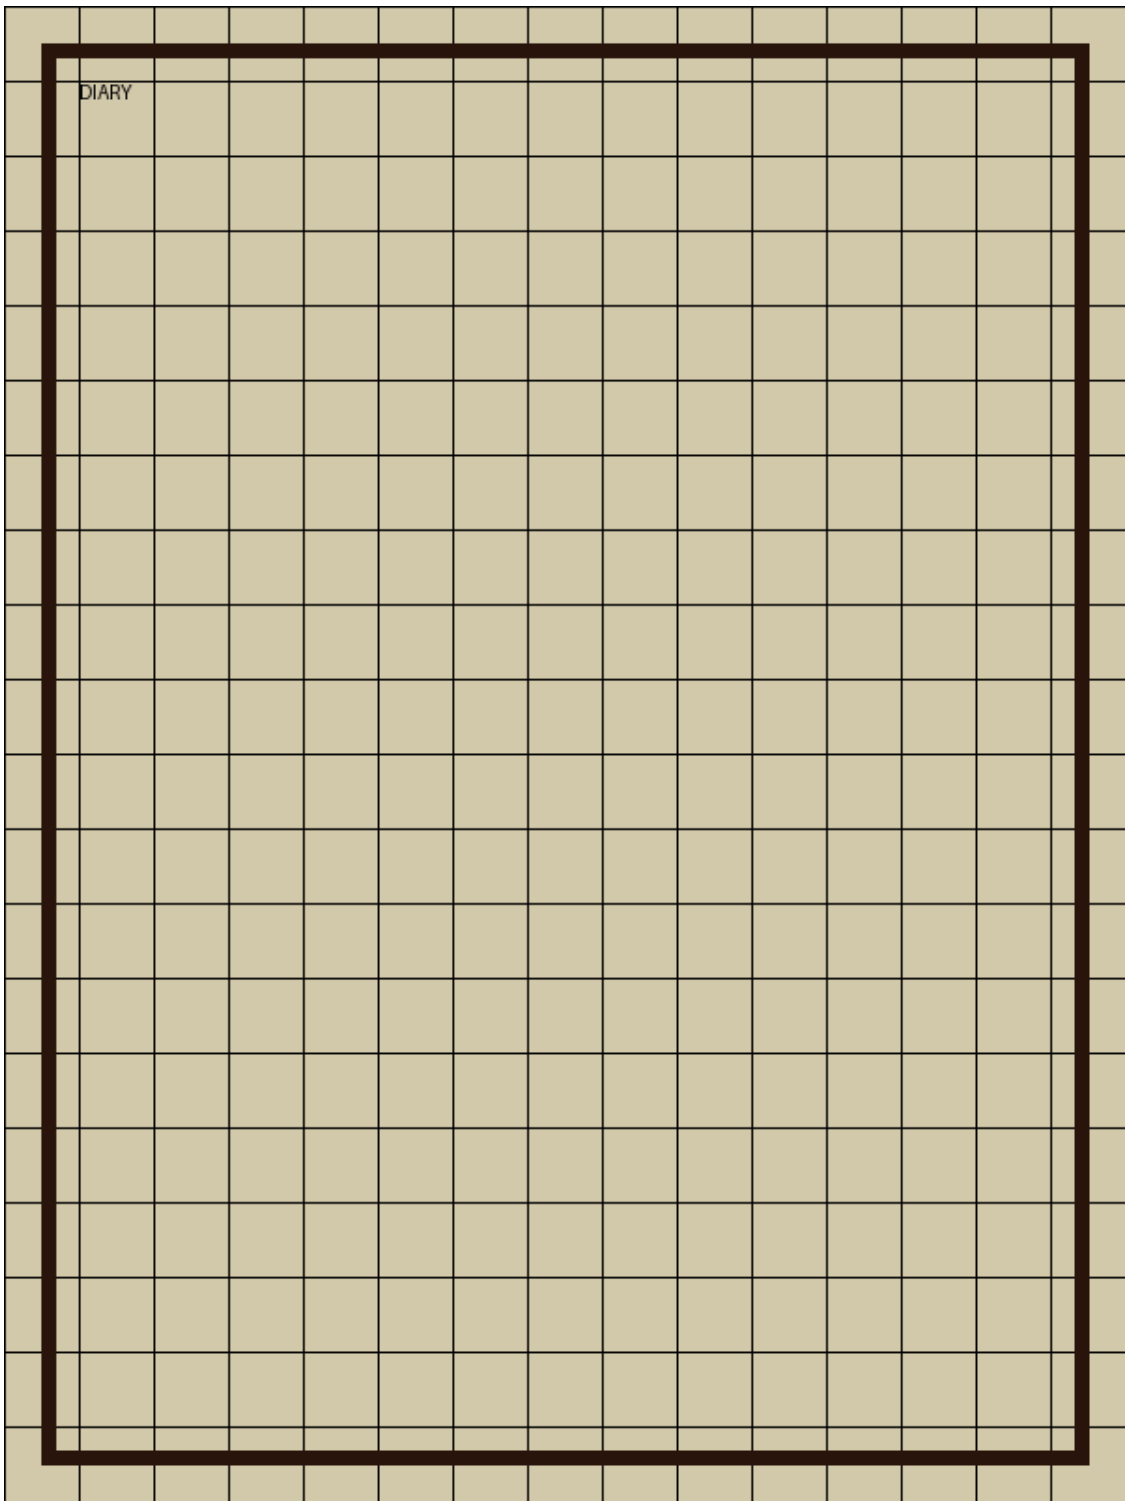

Papers & Clues

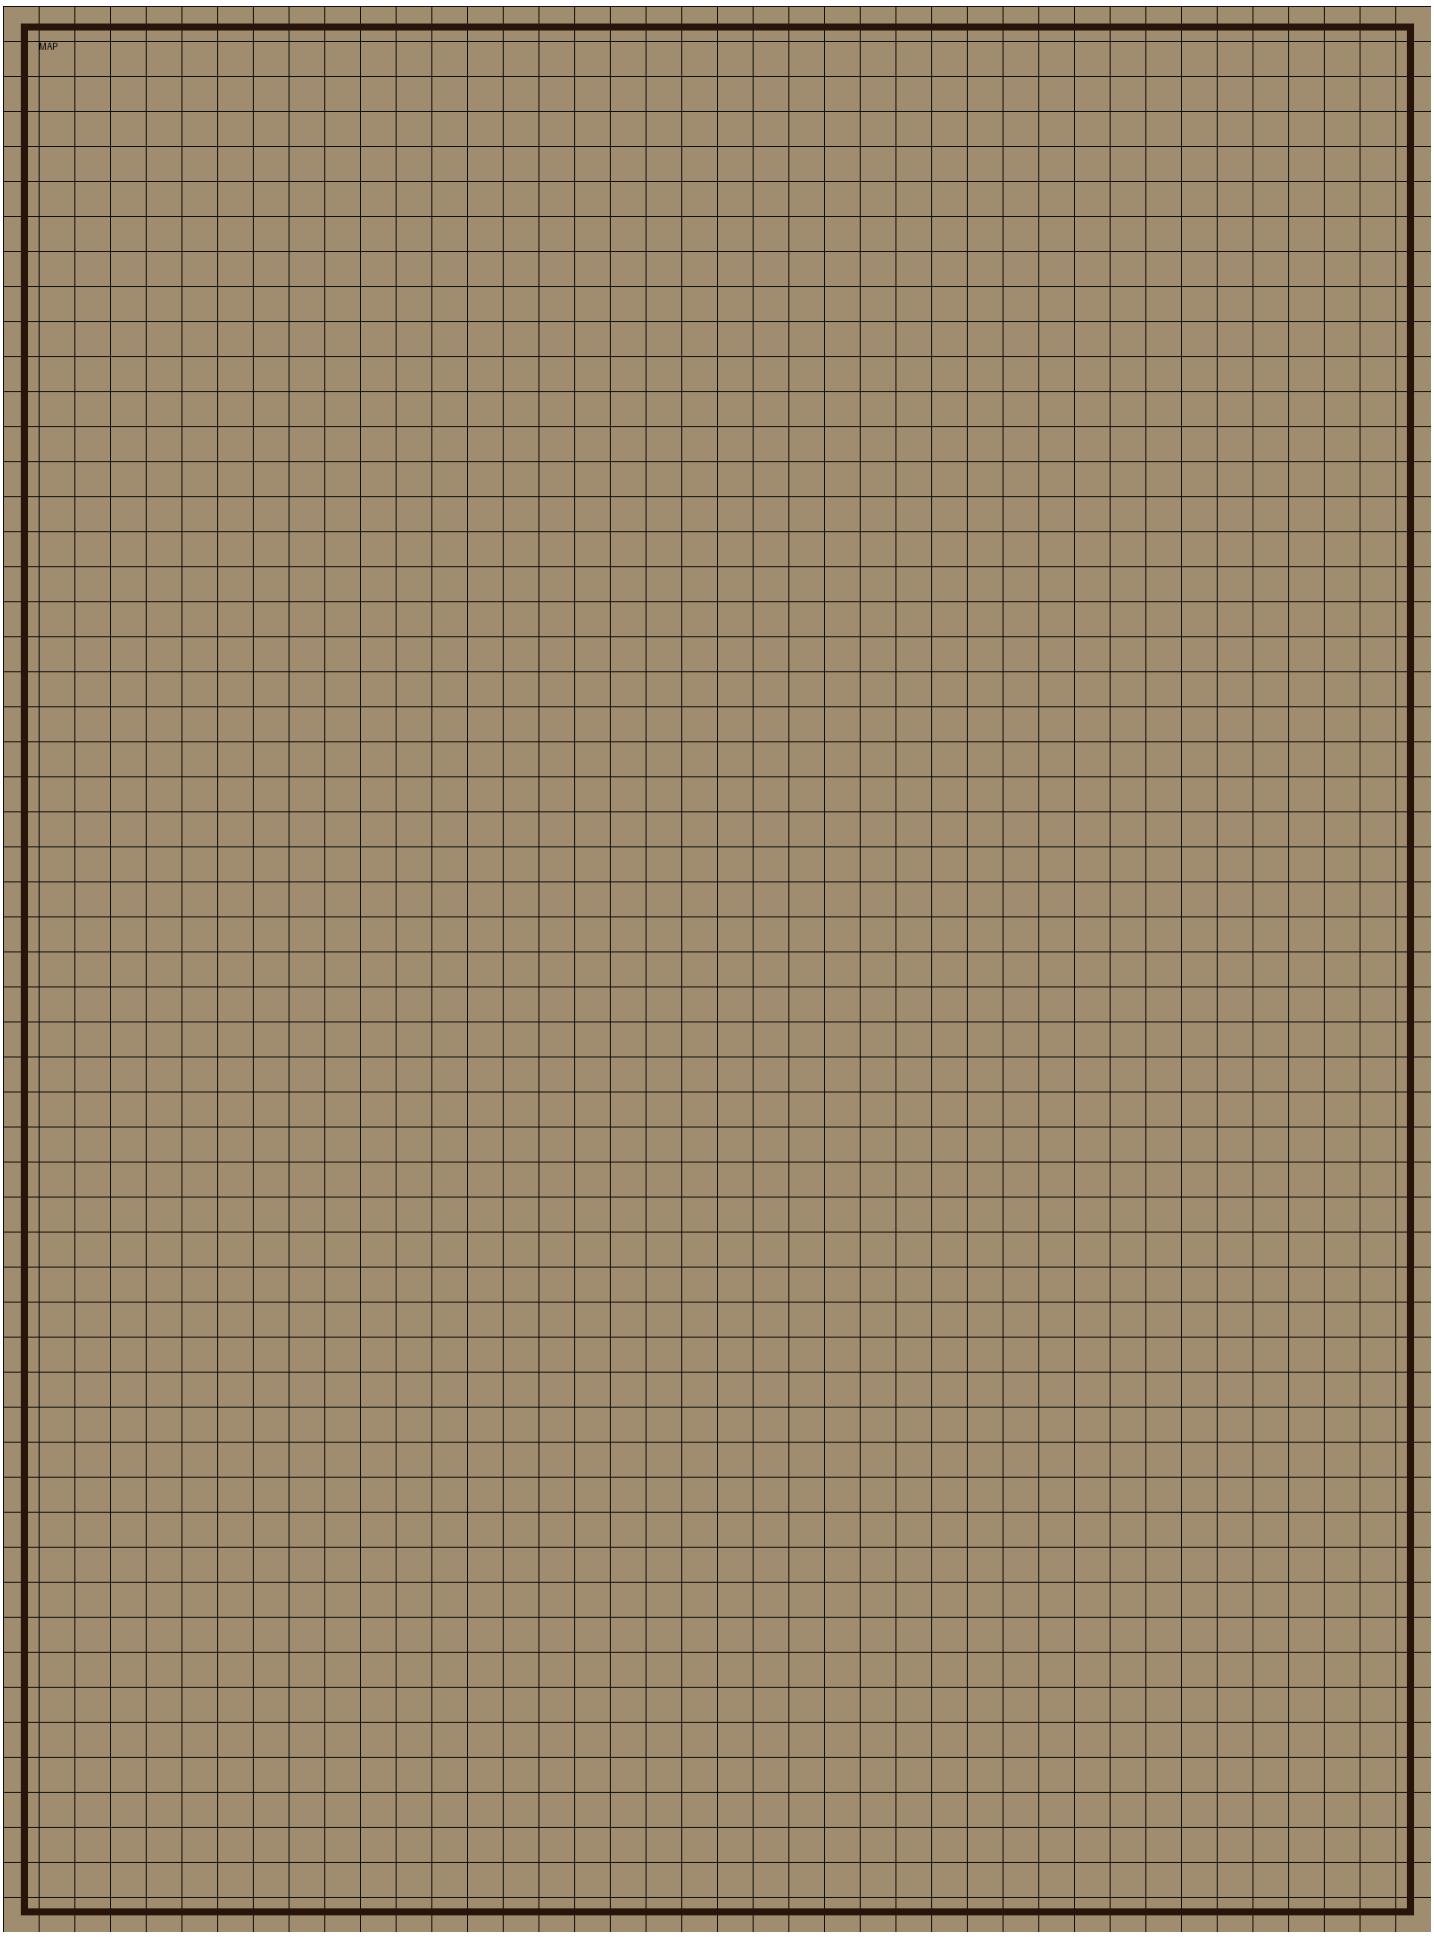

Handout 1: Providence Journal, 1880

Strange lights seen in the Corbitt house; neighbours complain of odours.

Handout 2: Walter Corbitt's Diary

Map: The Corbitt House